GONE COUNTRY
NANCY WILSON

It's no secret by now I've got my country crush-es — Dierks Bentley, Tim McGraw and Toby Keith to name a few. But, seeing as how they are all married, and I am sort-of-betrothed, there's a fine line between "sharing space" and becoming a "space invader."

For example, Joe Don Rooney of Rascal Flatts was playing with fellow bandmates Jay DeMarcus and Gary LeVox last weekend in Kelseyville, Calif. The lead guitarist was high fiving the crowd, when an overzealous female fan had to cross that line and pull Joe Don into the crowd.

Now, I think JDR is pretty cute, too, but I would never ever even think about yanking him off stage!

Seriously, what exactly did she plan to do with him once she got him in her clutches?

Thankfully, he wasn't hurt.

Now it's true, when you're a celebrity, you are a public figure, but that doesn't make you public property, does it? I'm sure JDR's wife, Tiffany, didn't appreciate it very much.

Faith Hill sure didn't back in July 2007. She and hubby Tim McGraw were on their "Soul II Soul" tour in Louisiana. Tim had finished his set and was shaking hands with fans when another overzealous female fan grabbed Tim in a very, very inappropriate place.

Well, Faith became my heroine when she called out the offender from the stage telling her she needed to get some class and that you do not grab someone else's husband's, um, body parts.

And the fan? Oh boy, what great notoriety that got her.

Just like the woman last weekend who pulled JDR in the crowd. Don't know if she managed to cop any feels, but no doubt she was going to give it a go before he was pulled to safety.

As a woman, I am livid at this kind of behavior. Can you imagine the drama if a guy pulled Carrie Underwood or Taylor Swift down into the crowd? He'd be run out of town on a rail, as he should be. Why should it be any less of an insult with the roles reversed?
